Only Those Who Score In Top Two Percent In I.Q. Can Join This Club

Dr. Hans Josef Eberstark, a man of immeasurably high intelligence, described himself as a "member of the most democratic society in the world." He was speaking of Mensa, a club that automatically bars exactly 98 per cent of the world's population from its rolls to McCandlish Phillips, of the New York Times. "There are absolutely no bars to admission," the thirty-seven year-old Swiss linguist said, "except you score on an I.Q. test. If you're in the top two per cent, we want you."

With that single restriction, the international cerebral society is totally democratic. It will take in anybody of any age, race, nationality, religion, or social rank who can pay the dues ($7.50 a year in the United States).

Mensa's four thousand members are scattered in 52 countries. They include novelists, dishwashers, itinerant workers, corporation presidents, seamen, professors, students, researchers, "a brewmaster, an oceanographer, a flavor chemist, the executive officer of a submarine and a four-year-old boy."

Mensa will take in high school dropouts if they have intellectual genius. "There are intelligent people who drop out of school because they are so utterly bored by it," Dr. Eberstark explained.

He flew into New York on the last stop of an 11-city tour of the United States and Canada in what he called "a head-hunting expedition."

Dr. Eberstark, who speaks 16½ languages by his own estimates (he counts Swiss-German as half a language), and whose friends call him a "living computer," works as an international conference interpreter at Geneva.

He is a Viennese Jew who fled Nazi persecution in 1938 and was reared in Shanghai.

"Give me a number," Dr. Eberstark said.

"Okay. 978510934724440."

"Give me more," he demanded.

"More," he said.

"3679841025."

Dr. Eberstark paused a minute. "97851093472444068391552367984 1-05," he said, reeling them off with flawless precision.

"Now I'll give them to you backwards," he said, "52014875—ah—no—make it 897—63255193860444-27439015879."

Dr. Eberstark continued: "If I go to a restaurant I cannot be swindled by a waiter who is supposed to add twelve per cent to the bill," he said. "I'm not a very pleasant customer if you try to diddle me," says the New York Times. He did not memorize the digit singly, he said. "I sort of photograph them in my mind in groups of ten and sort of tape record them as a series of sounds. The tape recording is what I've just played back for you" —at forward and backward speeds.

"Klusio keflat hopyki njepl kufirts," he wrote on a slip of paper. "I transpose the numbers into phonetic groupings in a sort of numerical language I worked out just for fun."

An I.Q. of 130 on the Wechsler scale or 148 on the Cattell scale suffices for admission to Mensa. Dr. Eberstark's intelligence flies clear off the Catell scale, which goes only to 161. His score is "161 plus."

Mensa is Latin for table. The society seeks to be a round table, or conversational forum, of the brightest people on earth.

"We are not a society of intellectual snobs. We don't sit around talking in six-syllable words." Dr.

Three Scientists, One A Woman, Who Discovered Nuclear Fission, On The Foundation Stone Of The Einstein Theory, Receive Fermi Gold Medal, And Prize Money Of U. S. Atomic Energy Commission

Three persons who, by their discoveries, ushered in the atomic age, were honored at Vienna, Austria, in the historic Hofburg Palace. They received this year's Enrico Fermi Award before a distinguished audience of eight hundred guests including Josef Klaus, the Austrian Chancellor, says the New York Times. Prof. Otto Hahn and his colleague, Prof. Fritz Strassmann, both of Germany, were present to receive the Fermi Gold Medal and citation from Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, chairman of the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

Prof. Lise Meitner, a native of Vienna, who now lives in Cambridge, England, was represented by her nephew, Prof. Otto Frisch, also a physicist. She will be presented the award in England next month. Professor Meitner worked with Professor Hahn in Germany until 1938 when the Nazis forced her to leave the country. She is the first woman to be granted the award.

This is the first time that the Fermi Medal, created in 1954 by the A.E.C. and linked with an award of $50,000 has gone to scientists who are not citizens of the United States. The three winners will share the $50,000 prize money. Each will receive a gold medal.

They were chosen jointly "because of their combined and individual efforts in discovering nuclear fission, and for their extensive experimental studies which led to this vital discovery."

The award, for contributions to nuclear energy, is named for the late Dr. Enrico Fermi, who led the project that culminated in the first controlled nuclear chain reaction, on December 2, 1942.

In his address, Dr. Seaborg said it was only fitting that the A.E.C. chose to make the presentation in Vienna, the headquarters of the International Atomic Agency, which is now holding its tenth annual conference. The meeting is attended by delegates from ninety-eight countries, says the New York Times. A message from President Johnson, read by Dr. Donald F. Hornig, director of the Office of Science and Technology in the White House, said in part:

"The scientific team we honor today provided the basis for Enrico Fermi's subsequent achievement of a sustained and controlled release of energy by nuclear fission.

"It is my earnest prayer that all of us — all the scientists and all the leaders of the world — will join together to put this power to work: not for war, but for peace — not for dominance, but for improvements — not for victory over our fellow man, but for victory over those ancient enemies of all men — poverty, and hunger, and illiteracy, and disease."

The report from Moscow that Soviet scientists were trying to develop nuclear weapons three years before the United States exploded the world's first atomic bomb recalls the strange irony involved in the American accomplishment of the feat, says Murray Illson, in the New York Times. When the Institute for Advanced Study was organized at Princeton, N. J., in 1932, Dr. Albert Einstein, a mild-mannered, pipe-smoking mathematician who played the violin for relaxation, was a German citizen.

The Institute offered him a post as professor of mathematics and theoretical physics, and he accepted it, planning to live in Princeton about half of each year.

However, with Hitler's rise to power, life for Jews became impossible in Germany, even for those as well known as Einstein, and late in 1933 he came to the U.S. to make his home in Princeton. In 1940 he became an American citizen.

The Einstein Special Theory of Relativity, published in 1905, was the foundation stone on which the development of energy rested.

Dr. Einstein was one of the outstanding pacifists of his time. But on learning that the Nazis had begun large-scale research for a new atomic weapon that could lead to their goal of world domination, he wrote a secret letter to President Franklin D. Roosevelt on August 2, 1939, says the New York Times. In that historic letter he informed the President of the danger confronting the free world and emphasized the need for "quick action on the part of the Administration."

"In the course of the last four months," Dr. Einstein told the President, "it has been made probable through the work of Joliot [Frederic Joliot Curie] in France, as well as Enrico Fermi and Leo Szilard in America — that it may become possible to set up a nuclear chain reaction in a large mass of uranium, by which vast amounts of power and large quantities of radium-like elements would be generated. Now it appears this could be achieved in the immediate future.

"This new phenomenon would also lead to the construction of bombs, and it is conceivable, though much less certain, that extremely powerful bombs of a new type may thus be constructed. A single bomb of this type, carried by boat and exploded in a port, might very well destroy the whole port, together with some of the surrounding territory. However, such bombs might very well prove too heavy for transportation by air."

The B-29 bomber that carried the first atomic bomb on its mission of unparalleled destruction over Hiroshima on August 6, 1945, was not in existence when Dr. Einstein wrote his letter to President Roosevelt. The letter resulted in the President's setting in motion the atomic bomb project, which was to cost $2-billion, says the New York Times, and bring about a transformation in the world of energy and the process of war.

On the morning of July 16, 1945, the United States exploded the first atomic bomb on the desert of New Mexico. Three weeks later came the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Five years after that, in 1950, the Federal Bureau of Investigation arrested Julius Rosenberg, who had been an engineer with the Army Signal Corps; his wife, Ethel, and others accused as their conspirators. The Government charged that the Rosenbergs, beginning in 1940, had transmitted military information, including top-secret data on nuclear weap-

Death Removes Veksler, Head Of Soviet High Energy Laboratory At Nuclear Research Institute

Dr. Vladimir I. Veksler, a leading Soviet physicist, died at Moscow, at the age of fifty-nine years. He was a specialist in the physics of X-rays and cosmic rays and in accelerator theory, and was active in the Soviet Union's nuclear research program. For the last ten years, says the New York Times, he was head of the Laboratory of High Energy at the Joint Institute for Nuclear Research at Dubna, north of Moscow. The Institute was organized in 1956 as a cooperative undertaking of Communist bloc countries.

The death of Dr. Veksler is a "great loss" for world science, the director of the Dubna Institute, Prof. Nikolai Bogolyubov, said. He praised Dr. Veksler as a founder of high-energy experimental physics whose works as early as 1944 made an important contribution to the theory of accelerators.

Dr. Veksler was graduated in 1931 from the Moscow Power Engineering Institute. He visited the United States in 1959 as a member of a scientific delegation. Three years later he headed a Soviet delegation to a conference on high-energy physics in Geneva.

Dr. Veksler was one of two physicists who, independent of each other, worked out a concept that greatly enhanced the power of atomic particle accelerators, or atom smashers. The other was Dr. Edwin M. McMillan, of the University of California's Lawrence Radiation Laboratory. In recognition of their contribution, they received the United States Atoms for Peace award in 1963, sharing the $75,000 prize money.

The two men overcame an important limitation of early accelerators, called cyclotrons. Cyclotrons sped up particles by giving them regular electrical pushes every

ONLY THOSE WHO SCORE IN TOP TWO PERCENT

Eberstark said. "You don't have to have a string of degrees to get in. It's not a matter of education but of raw intelligence."

The society, which was founded in England in 1945, is ready to accept members who cannot read or write. "When we expand into the under-developed countries we will have to include the illiterates" who can pass an oral test, he said.

"Intelligence is not especially admired by people," he remarked. "Outside Mensa you had to be very careful not to win an argument and lose a friend. Inside Mensa we can be ourselves and that is a great relief. We have friends everywhere, and interesting friends."

"What is your birth date?" he asked.

"December 4, 1927."

"You were born on a Sunday," he said.

"The circumference of a circle divided by its diameter is an irrational number that goes out to infinity," Dr. Eberstark said, reports the New York Times. "It's been figured out to 100,000 digits, I think. I once memorized it out to 1,500 digits: 3,14159265358979323-8926433832 3,14159265358979323-8926433832795028841971693993751-0582097494459230 7—" and he went on and on and on.

time they passed a certain point on a circular racetrack, says the New York Times. The particles could not be accelerated to energies above one hundred million electron volts. Because at that point, according to Einstein's theory of relativity, the particles gain mass and, as a result, slow down. This, in turn, prevents them from getting the electrical push at the right time, and they get out of phase.

The two physicians proposed correcting this imbalance by varying the magnetic field, or the frequency of the electrical surge.

The plan worked. It led to the development of much more powerful accelerators, which were called synchrotrons because they kept their phase stability in a process similar to that of a synchronous motor.

Dr. Veksler was a strong advocate of international cooperation in nuclear research. He spoke out publicly in praise of American scientists even when political tension between the Soviet Union and the United States was high.

When he accepted the Atoms for Peace Award in Washington in October of 1963, he said:

"Evidently the time has already come when not only in the cosmos but also in our physics here on earth the collaboration of our countries for the penetration into the depths of the micro world will be particularly fruitful."

In his own country Dr. Veksler was honored in 1959 with the Lenin Prize. He was credited with basic research on Sputnik I, says the New York Times, the world's first man-made satellite, which was launched by the Soviet Union in 1957.

INTRODUCING THE 1967 STANDARD OF THE WORLD

You are looking at two of the newest luxury cars ever created. They are typical of the dramatic newness you'll find everywhere in the Cadillac cars for 1967. The Fleetwood Eldorado—the world's finest personal car—is the first exciting case in point. Eldorado is a styling masterpiece . . . with its spectacularly long hood, its daring new roof lines and its dramatic rear quarter design. It is also an engineering triumph. For Eldorado is the first car in the world to combine the surefooted traction of front wheel drive with the manoeuvrability of variable ratio power steering and the balance of automatic level control. And with all its spirit and action, Eldorado provides unusual five-passenger spaciousness and the superb quietness and comfort that only Cadillac could create. This brilliant newness also marks the Cadillacs you are most familiar with. For they are the most beautiful Cadillacs of all time . . . with a new forward-sweeping grille and a new side contour that flows from front to rear! And with this new Cadillac look come a number of other significant achievements . . . the most luxurious interiors in history . . . a new generously padded instrument panel . . . a more responsive Cadillac engine . . . improved variable ratio power steering . . . and a new General Motors-developed energy-absorbing steering column. Discover all twelve of Cadillac's exciting new models for 1967 for yourself . . . at your authorized dealer's. NOTICE ABOUT PICTURES

The Canadian Jewish Review is now considering photographs for the Festival Magazine issue for Chanukah.

Preference is given to photographs posed before a plain, unfigured background, and all photographs must be straight, frontview, taken at a studio. Glossy proofs are required.

Do not accept dark pictures for reproduction in the sepia section of the Review from your photographer as they are not acceptable. The Review can not remedy them. Pictures, especially of children, must be light rather than dark and shadowed. Insist on this must.

Candid photographs can never be taken with the same care as photographs in a studio, with studio lighting and can not bear comparison with pictures which are carefully posed. Ask your photographer to arrange for studio photographs, too, particularly for weddings and bar-mitzvahs!

The Review will not reproduce pictures which are suggestive of beatnik influence and disarray as to hair-do and wearing apparel such as open-necked shirts without ties.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING

By Dr. W. Gunther Plaut, Rabbi of Holy Blossom Temple, in Toronto; in the Toronto Globe and Mail ....

You may not realize it, but Toronto witnessed a building boom of a special kind. In many homes throughout the city householders have erected little wooden huts in their backyards or on their balconies and have covered them with branches and greenery. The makeshift booths are decorated with fruit and colorful hangings, giving the modest structures a joyful air. Jews are celebrating the feast of Tabernacles or Succot.

The main characteristic of the Succah is its temporariness (although there are some homes of observant Jews where permanent booths are built into the dwelling); the branch-roofed bower is meant to be an incomplete and ineffective shelter from the inclemencies of weather. On visiting the Succah, the occupant should be moved to thoughts of life's vagaries and to contrast them with the persisting values of the spirit.

It all goes back to the law set down in Leviticus 23: "Mark, on the 15th day of the seventh month (the Hebrew month of Tishri), when you have gathered in the yield of your land, you shall observe the festival of your Lord to last seven days; a complete rest on the first day, and a complete rest on the eighth day. On the first day you shall take the product of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, boughs of leafy trees and willows of the brook, and you shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days. You shall observe it as a festival of the Lord, for seven days in the year; you shall observe it in the seventh month as a law for all time throughout the generations.

"You shall live in booths seven days; all citizens in Israel shall live in booths, in order that future generations may know that I made the Israelite people live in booths when I brought them out of the Land of Egypt, I the Lord your God."

The text makes it clear that the festival originally was agricultural, and this feature has never been lost. Tabernacles is the original thanksgiving festival of our civilization; the Canadian Thanksgiving date usually falls close to the biblically appointed time and U.S. Thanksgiving too was originally celebrated in October, since the first settlers were deeply aware of their biblical heritage.

This is also the time when in subtropical countries the farmer thinks of rain, and the Jewish liturgy to this day includes special prayers for rain during the festival of Tabernacles.

In northern climes, such as in Canada, the prescription "to live in booths seven days" is taken literally only by few. Most consider it sufficient to have token meals in the Succah.

The biblical text indicates that four different kinds of produce are to be used for the celebration of the festival. What branches of palm trees are is clear enough (the Christian Palm Sunday is an echo of this passage), and neither do willows of the brook need an explanation. But what is meant by "goodly" and "leafy" trees is not certain. Jewish tradition understands the former to refer to the citron or etrog (a form of large lemon), and the latter to the myrtle. The plants are bound together in a special arrangement called lulav and are waved ceremonially during the service as visible symbols of the harvest, urging the worshipper to a sense of gratitude and appreciation.

As in so many other areas of Jewish tradition, these customs too have had their many and varied interpretations. While the Bible makes it clear that the booths are to the remembrances of the wanderings in the desert, it is customary to take them to be symbols of life's frailty, reminders of the transitoriness of human existence. This is underscored by the public reading of the Book of Ecclesiastes, the one biblical book with a largely pessimistic point of view: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." The four products of nature are often said to stand for four different varieties of human beings. Each man for himself accounts for little, but men bound together in common purpose have great strength.

Coming so close at the heels of the High Holy Day season the festival's bright appeal is somewhat dimmed — but all is recaptured on the last day which has become one of the great joyful occasions in the Jewish religious calendar.

On that day, called Simchat Torah or Joy of the Law, adults and children assemble to watch all the sacred scrolls taken out of the Ark, and see them paraded in colorful ceremony throughout the synagogue. Children follow in the procession carrying little flags, and when the scrolls are returned to the altar, the annual cycle of synagogue readings is brought to a close. The end of Deuteronomy is read from one scroll and at once a new scroll is opened and the cycle is begun again:

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." The reading of the last page is always followed immediately by the reading of the first. The great Book is never closed, for man stands always in need of being nourished by the fountain of truth. Just as in the eternal change of agricultural seasons there is flowering, death and renewal, so the spiritual world presents its own unending rhythm.

The little shaky booth which you see in your neighbor's yard stands in significant measure for an unshakable conviction: that the goodness of God shows itself less in material gifts than in the spiritual treasures which have their value undiminished by time and circumstance.

LETTER TO MR. PINCUS IN JERUSALEM

By Max Federman, of Toronto, president of Achdut-Hoavoda Poale-Zion of Canada

I hereby acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 22, 1966, with the enclosed memorandum.

Achdut-Hoavoda Poale-Zion of Canada, after considering the content of your memorandum with the utmost attention it well deserves, and after many careful deliberations, would like to make the following observations:

In view of the decision of the Zionist Organization of Canada, two weeks ago in Montreal, to reject in toto the suggestions and resolutions as stated in the above memorandum, it becomes obvious that there exists a wide-open split between the Zionist Organization of Canada, and the parties of the Zionist Federation. Achdut-Hoavoda Poale-Zion considers the existing situation with grave concern since it endangers the whole structure of the Zionist movement in Canada, as well as the future of the entire communal make-up of the United Jewish Welfare Fund agencies.

We were also informed that the Zionist Federation is contemplating to call, in the near future, a convention of all Zionist groups. Our party is deeply convinced that such an act would be most unwise and undesirable, and goes contrary to the vital interests of Zionism in Canada. We believe that no such action should be taken by the Zionist Federation, unless the Jewish Agency is made thoroughly aware of the consequences entailed, and until the Agency has advanced its advice and instructions to the Zionist Federation with regard to a development of such importance.

I also wish to draw your attention to the fact that in this respect, there exists a definite difference of opinion between Achdut-Hoavoda and the other constituent parties of the Federation. We cannot allow ourselves to be a party to such drastic steps without the knowledge and approval of the Jewish Agency.

Achdut-Hoavoda is willing to work hand in hand with all other groups for the cause of strengthening the Zionist Movement in Canada. For this reason, we stand ready to help bring the quarrelling parties together with the fervent hope of establishing the long-cherished goal of one Zionist Federation, which will encompass all existing Zionist parties, as well as Non-Zionist groups in Canada.

Dr. Vera Weizmann, The Perfect Mate Of Chaim Weizmann, First President Of Israel

Dr. Vera Weizmann, widow of Chaim Weizmann, the first President of Israel, died in London at the age of eighty-seven. She was the perfect mate of the Zionist leader who was equally eminent as statesman and chemist, says the London Times. From Rostov-on-Don, she was a medical student at Geneva University where he was a Lecturer. He wooed her and after he had moved to England in 1906 to be Lecturer at Manchester University he married her.

She completed her medical studies in England, carried on a medical practice, and won a local reputation. Already in Manchester she showed notable social gifts, moving easily with all the men and women, Jewish and non-Jewish, whom Weizmann won to the Zionist cause. And she made for him a restful home.

During the First World War they moved to London, and their modest house in Addison Crescent was a centre for all the Zionist leaders and the best of English society. In times of trial as well as of triumphs, she strengthened him with loving care and understanding. Everywhere she was the gifted hostess, who could draw out sympathy from her guests.

When in the thirties Weizmann built at Rehovoth, Palestine, a home and a small research institute, she was the beautiful and gracious chatelaine. And after he became Israel's first President in 1948 and she was the first lady in the land, their residence was the magnet of all the important visitors to the young State.

Among public causes she was devoted to that great work of youth and children's rescue, which has brought to Israel 120,000 young people and trained them for life in the land, says the London Times. She had two sons; the younger who was an officer in the R.A.F. was killed in 1942 when attacking a German warship.

Lord Sieff of Brimpton writes in the London Times:

The death of Dr. Vera Weizmann brings to an end a fruitful and decisive period in the history of the Jewish people. It was her husband, Dr. Chaim Weizmann, who during the First World War succeeded in persuading the British War Cabinet to promulgate what is now known as the Halfour Declaration which, among other things, made it possible for the Jewish People to found and develop the Jewish National Home in the then Palestine. It was Dr. Chaim Weizmann, and his wife, Dr. Vera Weizmann, who carried the burden of all those activities, meetings, and discussions which ultimately ensured the eventual establishment of the State of Israel.

Dr. Vera Weizmann not only assisted her husband in his work but also took upon herself the responsibilities for institutions which would increase Jewish immigration into what was then British Mandated Palestine. She had great force of character and was constantly at the side of her husband in many of the important meetings which took place with British and foreign statesmen.

Independently of these activities she was interested and succeeded in developing organizations for the emigration of Jewish Children from Britain and the Continent of Europe. She was able, in Israel, to make certain that they were adequately absorbed into the life of the country and that they were trained so as to participate in its development and become citizens of the country of their adoption.

She was a woman of dignity and distinction, intelligent and with a great independence of spirit. She made many friends in this country, both Jew and non-Jew. She was a gracious and wonderful hostess and the Weizmann house was often the scene of interesting and purposeful discussion. I learnt to know her over 53 years ago when her husband was lecturer in organic chemistry in Manchester University. Their friendship was something which I valued and which brought me to love and admire them.

She threw herself into the task of organizing the rehabilitation of soldiers who had been wounded in the wars of independence. She had a great sense of humour. Her eyes lit up as she told stories of the difficulties that were successfully overcome in her fight against bureaucracy and stupid officials who put difficulties in her way as she strove for the children whom she loved seeking liberty and freedom in the land of their forefathers. She lived in a beautiful house in Rehovoth, and now it will no longer be graced by her presence, but her name will be blessed by thousands who through her activities found peace in their home land.
